SPECIAL PAPER OF THE STATE

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT 13 1865

What are Their "Principles"?

Democratic principles! What are they? Democratic principles! Week after week the Democratic leaders express indifference to the question, what are the principles of the Democratic party? Week after week they parade the whole country, and the whole press, with the cry of "Democratic principles!" Week after week they denounce the Republicans as destitute of principle, and yet week after week they refuse to tell what their principles are. Week after week they call upon the Republicans to declare their principles, and yet week after week they refuse to declare their own principles

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S World's Hair Restorer and Dressing. You cannot be disappointed in either. It will not stain or discolor the skin, but will impart the most beautiful shade of brown or black, according to the color of the hair. It contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil the finest cambric. It will restore hair on bald heads, where the glands are not entirely destroyed, and will prevent the hair from falling off. It will keep the hair in any position desired. It will not mat the hair, but leaves it in a beautiful, soft, and glossy condition. It will prevent dandruff, and cure all humors of the scalp. It will not color the skin, but will remove pimples, freckles, and tan, and render the complexion clear and beautiful. It is the only preparation known to chemists that will restore gray hair to its original color. It contains all the nutritive and coloring principles of the hair, and supplies directly the food required by the glands and roots to enable them to throw off only healthy hair. Nothing can be more清楚 than the fact that it restores gray hair to its original color, by the process of nature, and in accordance with the laws of health. Explanation and pamphlets, containing certificates of cures, sent free to any address. Sold by all Druggists.

A Visit to Salisbury Military Prison

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, writing from Salisbury, North Carolina, on the 3d inst., says:

The prison was enclosed by several acres of ground. They are placed on each side of which was a fence, and on both sides of the gate were sentinels. Including, [illegible] there were about 1,500 men confined in the prison. They have been here about two months, and they say they have been treated very well. [illegible] they had shelter from the weather. [illegible] they were allowed to have fires. [illegible] they were allowed to buy what they could get in the way of provisions.

The ground was for the most part very muddy, and the prisoners were obliged to stand in it. There were no sheds or barracks, where they could retire to avoid the heat in summer and the inclemency of winter. Those barracks were raised by the rebels last winter, but were burned by the prisoners, chiefly about three feet deep, in order that they might not afford a man and thus enable him to escape. They were originally intended to accommodate about 1,000 men, but they were crowded with 1,500 men, and were obliged to sleep in the open air. The only shelter they had was a few blankets, which they had stretched over sticks, and which afforded but little protection from the rain.

The tale of suffering here is not equal to that of [illegible] Confederate prisons, but it is bad enough. The rebels have not the means to feed their own soldiers, and they have not the means to feed the prisoners. They have been on short rations of corn bread and bacon, and the latter has been issued in very small quantities. Many of the prisoners have received no clothing since they were captured, and are in a very destitute condition. Many of them are without shoes, and have been compelled to wrap their feet in rags to keep them from freezing. Many of them have no blankets, and have suffered severely from the cold. Many of them have died from exposure, and many more will die before the winter is over. Those who have been here for some time look pale and emaciated, and have a hopeless, despairing look. Many of them have been here for months, and have received no letters from their friends. They have no means of communicating with their friends, and they do not know whether they are alive or dead. They have no means of knowing when they will be released, and they have no hope of ever getting out of prison.

The prisoners are allowed to buy provisions from the rebels, but they have no money, and they have to depend on the charity of the rebels for what they get. The rebels are very poor, and they have little to spare. They have to live on corn bread and bacon, and they have to cook it themselves. They have no cooking utensils, and they have to cook it in the ashes. They have no salt, and they have to eat it without salt. They have no vegetables, and they have to eat it without vegetables. They have no fruit, and they have to eat it without fruit. They have no milk, and they have to eat it without milk. They have no butter, and they have to eat it without butter. They have no eggs, and they have to eat it without eggs. They have no meat, and they have to eat it without meat. They have no fish, and they have to eat it without fish. They have no game, and they have to eat it without game. They have no poultry, and they have to eat it without poultry. They have no fruit, and they have to eat it without fruit. They have no vegetables, and they have to eat it without vegetables. They have no bread, and they have to eat it without bread. They have no flour, and they have to eat it without flour. They have no meal, and they have to eat it without meal. They have no rice, and they have to eat it without rice. They have no potatoes, and they have to eat it without potatoes. They have no onions, and they have to eat it without onions. They have no garlic, and they have to eat it without garlic. They have no salt, and they have to eat it without salt. They have no pepper, and they have to eat it without pepper. They have no spices, and they have to eat it without spices. They have no herbs, and they have to eat it without herbs. They have no water, and they have to drink it without water. They have no milk, and they have to drink it without milk. They have no tea, and they have to drink it without tea. They have no coffee, and they have to drink it without coffee. They have no sugar, and they have to drink it without sugar. They have no molasses, and they have to drink it without molasses. They have no honey, and they have to drink it without honey. They have no fruit juice, and they have to drink it without fruit juice. They have no vinegar, and they have to drink it without vinegar. They have no wine, and they have to drink it without wine. They have no beer, and they have to drink it without beer. They have no whiskey, and they have to drink it without whiskey. They have no brandy, and they have to drink it without brandy. They have no rum, and they have to drink it without rum. They have no gin, and they have to drink it without gin. They have no liquor, and they have to drink it without liquor. They have no drink, and they have to drink it without drink. They have no food, and they have to eat it without food. They have no nothing, and they have to eat it without nothing.

The prisoners are allowed to write letters to their friends, but they have no means of sending them. They have no stamps, and they have no money to buy them. They have no paper, and they have to write on the backs of old letters. They have no pens, and they have to write with sticks. They have no ink, and they have to write with charcoal. They have no envelopes, and they have to fold their letters in the old way. They have no post-office, and they have to send their letters by hand. They have no messengers, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no confidence in the rebels, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever reach their friends, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be answered, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be read, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be received, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be delivered, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be sent, and they have to send their letters by the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be written, and they have to write their letters to the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be thought of, and they have to think of their letters to the rebels. They have no hope that their letters will ever be remembered, and they have to remember their letters to the rebels.
